C.A.F.O.D – Green issues

No UK-based company should stand to benefit from the destruction of planet and people

The Amazon rainforest is under threat. In Brazil, since President Jair Bolsonaro took office in 2019 an area equivalent to the size of Jamaica has been destroyed. In Peru, Colombia and Bolivia the situation is also dire.

The UK is not innocent. The destruction of forests is often to provide land for the production of goods later sold by UK businesses, including beef, soya, palm oil, timber and minerals. By buying their products, we are complicit in driving deforestation and human rights violations against forest communities.

This is not only a problem in Latin America. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, local experts are working tirelessly to safeguard the Congo Basin from harmful projects which benefit agriculture and mining companies, but bring little or no benefit to local people.

Campaign with us to protect our common home

Indigenous peoples and local communities are the best protectors of forests. Our recent report shows how land and environmental human rights defenders in Latin America depend on the earth's natural resources, safeguard forests for generations, and are on the frontline of defending against the climate crisis.

The cry of the earth and the cry of the poor are deeply interconnected. Over the last few months, we've been putting this belief, recognised in our strategic frame work our common home, into practice.
